Scenario 1

Circumstances

Phone call received from an Adult mental health practitioner requesting that we assist in taking an elderly male patient to the Leicester Royal Infirmary for a life threatening medical emergency. He has Alzheimer's and has historically hit out and spat in the past at people. He is currently aggressive but hasn't been violent.

This is primarily a health issue, East Midlands Ambulance Service are the most suitable agency to deal with this and have a duty to equip their staff to deal with foreseeable risks and are trained in restraint.

Do we attend?

Do we assist East Midlands Ambulance Service?

Due to his age and frailty if we attended any use of force would have to be proportionate, but does immediately place the officers and organisation under scrutiny.

Circumstances

A member of the CRISIS team contacted police to say that they have a patient who was released from the Bradgate Unit a week ago and is described that she is still in a mental health crisis. She receives daily visits from the CRISIS team however they were really late and this had upset the patient significantly. The female lives alone with her dog is a recluse and rarely goes out. She can be aggressive and was annoyed at the delay. Two hours later when the CRISIS team arrived they couldn't get into the address and they couldn't reach the female on the phone. There was no dog at the address nor was her car there. She contacted the Police to assist her. There is a keysafe at the address and the control room hold the code but she was refusing to enter the house alone due to her aggressive behaviour previously. The code was passed. No information known as to the car registration. PNC checks didn't have any vehicle registered to the address.

What is required of the Police?

Should we take any action, is it our responsibility?

There are no grounds for powers of entry into the address as its believed she isn't there. Should we treat her as a MFH given her previous suicidal tendencies and actively try and locate her?
